THE SURRENDER OF LEE. We were conversing one evening about Lee's surrender. The General teld the story of the memorable event. "The night before Lee surrendered," he said, "I had a wretched headache—headaches to which I have been subject—nervous prostration interests." Thad a wretched headache—headaches to which I have been subject—nervous prostration, intense personal suffering. But, suffer or not, I had to keep moving. I saw clearly, especially after Sheridan had cut off the escape to Danville, that Lee must surrender or break and run into the mountains—break in all directions and leave us a dozen guerilla bands to fight. My campaign was not Richmond, not the defeat of Lee in actual fight, but to remove him and his array out of the contest, and, if possible, to have him use his influence in inducing the surrender of Johnston and the other isolated armies. You see the war was an enormous strain upon the country. Rich as we were, I do not now see how we could have endured it another year, even from a financial point of view. So, with these views, I wrote Lee, and opened the correspondence—not nearly so well as he did in our subsequent interviews, where his whole bearing was that of a patriotic and gallant soldier, concerned alone for the welfare of his army and his Etate. I received word that Lee would meet me at a point within our lines near Sheridan's headquarters. I had to ride quite a distance through a muddy country. I remember now that I was concerned about my personal ar-

Your correspondent asked the General how he ranked Jackson among soldiers. "I knew Stonewall Jackson," said the General, "at West Point and in Mexico. At West Point he came into the school at an older age than the average, and began with a low grade. But he had so much courage and energy, worked so hard and governed his life by a discipline so stern, that he steadily worked his way along and rose far Love others who had more advantages. Stonewall Jackson at West Point was in a state of constantimprovement. He was a religioux man then, and some of us regarded him as a fanatic. Sometimes his religion took strange forms—hypochondria—fancies that an evil spirit had taken possession of him. But he never relaxed in his studies or his Christian duties. I knew him in Mexico. He was always a brave and trustworthy officer—none more so in the army. I never knew him or encountered him in the rebellion. I question whether his campaigns in Virginia justify his reputation as a great commander. whather his campaigns in Virginia justify his reputation as a great commander. He was killed too soon, and before his rank allowed him a great command. It would have been a test of generalshin if Jackson had met Sheridan in the valley instead of some of the men he did meet. Jackson had met Sheridan in the valley instead of some of the men he did meet. From all I know of Jackson and all I see of his campaigns I have little doubt of the result. If Jackson had attempted on Sheridan the tactics he attempted so successfully upon others he would not only have been beaten but destroyed. Sudden, daring raids, under a fine general like Jackson, might de against raw troops and inexperienced commanders, such as we had in the beginning of the war, but not against drilled troops and a commander like Sheridan. The tactics for which Jackson is famous, and which achieved such remarkable results, belonged entirely to the beginning of the war, and to the peculiar conditions under which the earlier battles were fought. They would have insured destruction to any commander who tried them upon Sherman, Thoman, Sheridan, Meade, or, in fact, any of our great generals. Consequently Jackson's fame as a general depends upon achievements gained before his generalship was tested—before he had a chance of matching himself with a really great commander. No doubt so able and patient a man as Jackson, who worked so hard at anything he attempted, would have adapted himself to new conditions and risen with them. He died before his opportunity. I always respected Jackson personaity, and esteemed his sincere and manly character. He impressed me always as a man of the Cromwell stamp—a Puritaa—much more of the New Englander than the Virginian. If any man believed in the rebellion, he did. And his nature meth the knowledge I and gained of the control of t

Auderson Intelligencer. get them home and have our armies go to their homes and fields. But Lee would not move without Davis, and, as a matter of fact at that time, or coon after, Davis was a fugitive in the words." JEFFERSON DAVIS AND THE SOUTH.

An allusion was made to the feeling in the South that Davis was an injury to the Confederacy and did not do his best. "I never thought so," said the General. "Davis did his best—did all that any man could do—to save the Confederacy. This argument is like some of the arguments argument is like some of the arguments current in history—that the war was a war against windmills, and that if one nar or another had been in authority the result would have been different; that some more placable man than Davis could have made a better fight. This is not true. The war was a tremendous war, and no one knows better than those who were in it. Davis did all he could and all any man could for the South and all any man could for the South. The South was beaten from the begin-The South was beaten from the beginning. There was no victory possible for any government resting upon the platform of the Southern Confederacy. Just as soon as the war united and aroused the young men of the North and called out the National feeling, there was no end but the end that came. Do is did all he could do for his side, and how much he did do no one knows better than these who were in the field." knew of any movement was when I wrote it out in rough and gave it to be copied off."

STONEWALL JACKSON.

GRANT THINKS POORLY OF PILLOW, PLOYD, &C.

People think that Donelson was captured by pouring men into it ten to one, or some such odds. The truth is our army—a new army—invested a fortified place and compelled a surrender of a force much larger than our own. A large number of the rebels escaped under Floyd and Pillow, but as it was I took more prisoners than I had under my command for the first two days of my investment. After the investment we were re-inforced, so that at the surrender there were 26,000 Union troops, about 4,000 of which were sent back to guard the road to where the steamers lay with our supplies. There were 22,000 effective men in Donelson at the beginning of the siege. Of course there was a risk in FLOYD, &C. the siege. Of course there was a risk in attacking Donelson as I did, but," said the General, smiling, "I knew the men who commanded it. I knew some of them in Mexico. Knowledge of that kind goes far toward determining a movement like this," THE ATTACK ON FORT DONELSON.

"If Longstreet or Jackson," said the General, "or even if Buckner had been in command, I would have made a different campaign. In the beginning we all did things more rashly than later, just as Jackson did in his earlier camjust as Jackson did in his earlier campaigns. The Mexican war made the officers of the old regular armies more or less acquainted, and when we knew the name of the general opposing we knew enough about him to make our plans accordingly. What determined my attack on Donelson," said the General, "was as much the knowledge I had gained of its commanders in Mexico as anything else. But as the war progressed and each side kept improving its army these experiments were not possible. Then it became hard, earnest war, and neither side could depend upon any chance with the Somebody has said that Americans make the best Frenchmen of all the foreigners who flock here from all parts of the globe; and from what I have seen of our beloved countrymen abroad, I am inclined to believe that such is really the fact. The English are always English, and promenade in London styles on the avenues; affect nothing but dog-carts and drags, and when they condescend to learn French, never speak it without the peculiar nasal cockney twang of London. The Russians, of whom there are always a large colony here, are intensely Russian in everything, and spend more money on diamonds, champagne and questionable women than all the other foreigners put together. The Germans, of whom we have also a great many here, are as a rule of an economical turn of mind; patronize cheap restaurants and third-class hotels, and assimilate with nothing as readily as beer. They are the least popular of all the foreigners here, for Paris has not yet forgotten 1871. But an American has not been a week in Paris before he waxes his moustache. buys a plug hat of the latest Parisian styles, sports lavender kids and a whalebone cane with an ivory leg for a handle, wear narrow trowsers, sack-cost and patent leather boots, and says "pardon
